

Introduction

With this issue, the Journal of Military Aviation History (JMAH) begins a new era in publishing new, original materials on the history of military aviation. Articles, archival documents, diaries, letters, photographs, oral history transcripts, and book reviews make up the format of our new journal. Issue 1 includes three articles, book reviews, a war diary, a gallery of World War II air war photographs, and some informational notices about historical projects and organizations that specialize in military aviation history.

It gives me great pleasure to assume the duties of editor. During the months ahead, the next issue will begin to take form. I urge you to consider submitting an article or writing a book review. I encourage archives, museums, special historical projects, and other historical organizations to consider contributing to the Documents and Oral History section of our journal.

There are also opportunities to review manuscripts in our double blind evaluation process. Details and guidelines for submissions can be found on JMAH's website at journalmah.org. So visit us on the web for contact information and other details about how you can contribute to Issue 2 in 2018.

Vernon L. Williams
Department of History and Global Studies
Abilene Christian University